How could he be an antagonist? Or was it merely that he had no more faith in the project than the rest of the world? It seems like yesterday that Warner Bros. and DC were making huge promises about the prospects for a Deathstroke movie. Now, the Suicide Squad is dead, and the door is officially closed on Deathstroke. And it all began with Suicide Squad 2. "I'm not saying that's a bad idea, I'm just saying it's very bad timing." In February 2017, director James Gunn left the Suicide Squad sequel due to creative differences. Perhaps most controversially, there was some question as to whether the title character in the movie, Deathstroke, would even be in it. Warner Bros.' CEO Kevin Tsujihara was quoted as saying the project was "not happening." While he may have just been using strong language to shut the conversation down, the idea that Deathstroke, a major player in the DC cinematic universe, wouldn't be in Suicide Squad 2 was hard to swallow. Unfortunately, it was no longer a question of whether Deathstroke would be in Suicide Squad 2. It was a question of when. It was only a matter of time before Warner Bros. and DC took to the stage with their new lineup and reintroduced us to the DC Universe. And now we know that Deathstroke will be a part of it. When Will Suicide Squad 2 Happen? Even though Deathstroke is part of a Suicide Squad movie, there are still plenty of questions to be answered regarding the Justice League vs. Suicide Squad movie. For example, if the movie is labeled a "Justice League" movie and includes the Suicide Squad, will they be in a prison cell together? Perhaps the two groups will actually be fighting each other in the Justice League vs. Suicide Squad movie. Or, even more baffling, if the Suicide Squad will be split into two separate teams and put into prison cells together. What team will team A be? What team will team B be? Can the two teams fight each other in prison? Will the Suicide Squad be the "good" team? Will the Justice League be the "evil" team? This is all going to come down to scheduling, not only for the next Suicide Squad movie, but for the next Justice League vs. Suicide Squad movie as well. Even though we've known that the Deathstroke movie is officially not happening, it has yet to be officially confirmed 82157476af
